- 1.. Our project is developing as planned. We are continuing to work toward completing all products for the project.
2. Working with the museum has allowed students to experience the uses of technology in a real world setting.
3. All of the identified goals for our project have been addressed.

<http://www.k-12.state.tn.us>

Understand the visual arts in relation to history and cultures
(National Standard 4)
(history, criticism, aesthetics, production)

Subjectively and objectively assess the characteristics and merits of personal artwork
and the works of others
(National Standard 5)
(aesthetics, criticism, history, production)

Create connections between visual arts and other disciplines
(National Standard 6)
(criticism, aesthetics, history, production)

We have made great progress in addressing these goals. We have involved students as active learners in this interdisciplinary project by using state- of- the- art computer equipment to achieve our objectives.

4. Goals 2000 has allowed us to use our computer equipment to broaden student knowledge of the countless uses of technology in accessing, evaluating, creating and synthesizing information. Our Goals 2000 project has allowed students and teachers to use technology to become a working part of the larger world outside the school, to see professionals at work, to give parents and the community tangible evidence of the work of students, to provide the community with a lasting record of the artists involved in the project.

5. The first great happening concerning our project is our completed website. It is now online and may be viewed at the address given.
